Jomati and Altman Weil in transatlantic tie-up

31 January 2005

Jomati, the legal management consultancy run by former Clifford Chance and Andersen Legal managing partner Tony Williams (left), has announced a strategic alliance with US consultants Altman Weil. Both Jomati and Altman Weil have recently advised on transatlantic mergers, with Jomati advising on the Kirkpatrick & Lockhart-Nicholson Graham & Jones tie-up and Altman Weil handling the DLA Piper Rudnick Gray Cary deal.

Jomati brings in two consultants

28 January 2004

Jomati, the legal consultancy set up by former Andersen Legal head Tony Williams, has hired two senior consultants. The hires are John Angel, visiting professorial fellow at the Institute of Computer and Communications Law at Queen Mary University, and John Holmes, until recently managing partner of Clifford Chance's (CC's) Dubai branch. Williams, who was also a former managing partner at CC, said: "Firms need good people to help them manage their strategy and in John Angel and John Holmes, they have two talented and experienced professionals."

Life after Andersen

By Bob Sherwood and Nikki Tait

October 21, 2002

There is life after Andersen Legal. Tony Williams, the former Andersen Legal worldwide managing partner, and ex-managing partner of Clifford Chance, has announced that he is setting up his own legal management consultancy.

The venture is to be called Jomati, and "aims to provide firms with practical advice on planning, developing, testing and implementing their overall business strategies". The new consultancy will be London-based, but intends to operate on an international basis.
